As we say goodbye to 2022, we are reflecting on the work GCADV has been able to do through the support from our member programs and community partners. With that continued support, we look forward to our ongoing mission to support survivors throughout Georgia and support our member programs’ work. In the re-launch of our newsletter, we’re highlighting some of GCADV’s recent work and looking toward what’s on the horizon in 2023. We’re especially excited to reunite and gather once again with many of you, as we return to hosting in-person events, like Stand With Survivors Day, Frontline Advocacy Training, and Race for Empowerment. And we’ll continue to take advantage of the benefits of connecting with you virtually by offering many of our trainings, meetings, and activities through Zoom and other virtual platforms. We look forward to seeing you!

-Christy Showalter

 примечание: В документе не обнаружено текста, который нужно было бы прочитать как текст.
There are many opportunities for non-carceral solutions to address the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR highlighted the significant opportunity for diversion tactics to better address the needs of individuals put behind bars, long processing times, high pretrial detention rates, and inability to make bonds. The overall increase in pretrial detention does not prevent individuals from becoming contributing members of society. A recent example is the overcrowding experienced by Fulton County jails.

The findings from Georgetown Law, along with the highly anticipated Fulton County Jail Population Review Study (JPR) concluded that diversion tactics could better address the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR was a stipulation to the August 2022 agreement from the City Council of Atlanta's agreement to approve the leasing of 700 beds at the Atlanta City Detention Center to reduce the population within the jail, documentation is currently being prepared to be signed by Mayor Andre Dickens and to move forward with the lease.

The JPR was a stipulation to the August 2022 agreement between the city council of Atlanta to approve the leasing of 700 beds at the Atlanta City Detention Center to reduce the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR identified non-carceral solutions to reduce the population within the jail. The JPR highlighted the significant opportunity for diversion tactics to better address the needs of individuals put behind bars, long processing times, high pretrial detention rates, and inability to make bonds. The overall increase in pretrial detention does not prevent individuals from becoming contributing members of society. A recent example is the overcrowding experienced by Fulton County jails.

There are many opportunities for non-carceral solutions to address the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR highlighted the significant opportunity for diversion tactics to better address the needs of individuals put behind bars, long processing times, high pretrial detention rates, and inability to make bonds. The overall increase in pretrial detention does not prevent individuals from becoming contributing members of society. A recent example is the overcrowding experienced by Fulton County jails.

The findings from Georgetown Law, along with the highly anticipated Fulton County Jail Population Review Study (JPR) concluded that diversion tactics could better address the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR was a stipulation to the August 2022 agreement between the city council of Atlanta to approve the leasing of 700 beds at the Atlanta City Detention Center to reduce the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR highlighted the significant opportunity for diversion tactics to better address the needs of individuals put behind bars, long processing times, high pretrial detention rates, and inability to make bonds. The overall increase in pretrial detention does not prevent individuals from becoming contributing members of society. A recent example is the overcrowding experienced by Fulton County jails.

The findings from Georgetown Law, along with the highly anticipated Fulton County Jail Population Review Study (JPR) concluded that diversion tactics could better address the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR was a stipulation to the August 2022 agreement between the city council of Atlanta to approve the leasing of 700 beds at the Atlanta City Detention Center to reduce the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR highlighted the significant opportunity for diversion tactics to better address the needs of individuals put behind bars, long processing times, high pretrial detention rates, and inability to make bonds. The overall increase in pretrial detention does not prevent individuals from becoming contributing members of society. A recent example is the overcrowding experienced by Fulton County jails.

The findings from Georgetown Law, along with the highly anticipated Fulton County Jail Population Review Study (JPR) concluded that diversion tactics could better address the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR was a stipulation to the August 2022 agreement between the city council of Atlanta to approve the leasing of 700 beds at the Atlanta City Detention Center to reduce the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR highlighted the significant opportunity for diversion tactics to better address the needs of individuals put behind bars, long processing times, high pretrial detention rates, and inability to make bonds. The overall increase in pretrial detention does not prevent individuals from becoming contributing members of society. A recent example is the overcrowding experienced by Fulton County jails.

The findings from Georgetown Law, along with the highly anticipated Fulton County Jail Population Review Study (JPR) concluded that diversion tactics could better address the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR was a stipulation to the August 2022 agreement between the city council of Atlanta to approve the leasing of 700 beds at the Atlanta City Detention Center to reduce the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR highlighted the significant opportunity for diversion tactics to better address the needs of individuals put behind bars, long processing times, high pretrial detention rates, and inability to make bonds. The overall increase in pretrial detention does not prevent individuals from becoming contributing members of society. A recent example is the overcrowding experienced by Fulton County jails.

The findings from Georgetown Law, along with the highly anticipated Fulton County Jail Population Review Study (JPR) concluded that diversion tactics could better address the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR was a stipulation to the August 2022 agreement between the city council of Atlanta to approve the leasing of 700 beds at the Atlanta City Detention Center to reduce the overcrowding at the Fulton County Jail. The JPR highlighted the significant opportunity for diversion tactics to better address the needs of individuals put behind bars, long processing times, high pretrial detention rates, and inability to make bonds. The overall increase in pretrial detention does not prevent individuals from becoming contributing members of society. A recent example is the overcrowding experienced by Fulton County jails.