In 2010, GCADV recognized that this critical piece of anti-oppression analysis was missing from our work, specifically in the work of undoing and ending racism. You can learn more about the analysis and changes we have made.

GCADV has incorporated racial justice into its trainings and community engagement projects. Learn more about past and upcoming trainings.

We have also developed a Resources for Racial Justice page for people of color and white aspiring allies.

Domestic violence is an issue of social injustice, rooted in oppression. To end domestic violence, active steps must be taken at individual, local, regional, and statewide levels to end all forms of oppression.

The Center for Pan Asian Community Services has served over 2 million immigrant and refugees communities from all over the world since 1980. Founded on the belief that "people need people" aims to promote self-sufficiency and equity. CPACS provides translation and interpretation services, counseling, legal and immigration assistance, advocacy, and a host of social services for seniors, women, and youth. As part of their domestic violence programing they provided emergency assistance, legal, criminal justice, and personal advocacy, and referrals to Asian-focused domestic violence shelters. Learn more about their program here.
